PREFACE.

In the twenty years of literary production in the United States of America, of which this second volume of the AMERICAN BIBLIOGRAPHY is a record, the printing-press has also become established in the Provinces of Virginia and South Carolina, and a literature in the German language has become an integral part of our own.

With the spread of printing into the Provinces south of New England the literary record assumes a broader outlook. It becomes freer, more outspoken, discussion of public questions takes a wider sweep, and the purely literary is more cultivated. With the flow of emigration and immigration property rights and boundaries become more jealously guarded, and vulgar competition in society and politics becomes a marked feature of American life: New York, always the stormy petrel of American political life, leading in this. The prevailing tone of literary production is still dominantly religious, but more and more variant from the uniform sentiment which pervaded the first volume.

Massachusetts is still true to its early teachers, and the sermon still remains the most authentic revelation we possess of the mind and heart, the learning and intellectual energy of New England. Here and there are individual cases of rebellion from the fixed government and discipline of the church, but the heavy hand of council or synod, or the earnest pleading of his brethren brings the erring brother to his knees, as in the case of James Davenport; or he finds the service of his Master more congenial elsewhere, as the eminent ability of Jonathan Edwards was lost to Massachusetts. It was a period of unrest in churches, a revival of religious feeling outside of them, and is strongly marked by the assertion of the right of lay-members in the offices of the church.

In Connecticut the missionaries of the Church of England were actively and controversially propagating their faith from that vantage-ground. New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland and the Carolinas were free to them, and Virginia, where severe penalties were enacted against Moravians, New-Lights and Methodists, was already their own.

Owing to sectarian and provincial bigotries, the Dutch Church in New York never assumed the proportions in literary production that the importance of their early colonization would seem to have warranted. How much the general average of intelligence in the Colony entered into this, for the representatives of the church were men of high ability, can only be conjectured, but one historian of the period is authority for the statement that in 1745 there were only fifteen men of academical training in the Province. The church record of New Jersey, in this period, is mainly the printed writings of the brothers Gilbert and John Tennent, the former being compared by his contemporaries to George Whitefield in the eloquence and power of his preaching.

In Pennsylvania had grown up a strong and resolute band of German visionaries and enthusiasts, who, under the names of Mystics, Inspirationists, Pietists, Mennonites, Dunkers, Ephrata Brethren, Herrnhuters, United Brethren or Moravians, clashed over questions of Sabbatarianism, celibacy and mystic theology, each aspiring to inaugurate in a new world a new era of christianity. Count Nikolas Ludwig von Zinzendorf, who had received from a Lutheran congregation a call to the ministry, on his arrival at Philadelphia attempted, by a series of conferences, to draw the godly minded of all the German denominations and sects into one spiritual brotherhood, without destroying their allegiance to their several creeds. In this he failed. The delegates from other religious bodies withdrew and left the field to the Moravians. Some impression was made upon the Lutheran and Reformed congregations, who were induced to accept ministers ordained by him or his coadjutors, but the general result was dissensions and the bitter controversy which forms so large a part of the issues of the German printing-press of this period. Amid the storm of the warring factions the Quakers of Pennsylvania, strong in their faith, and in the political control of the Assembly, calmly avoided any expression except the one point of peace, upon which they were firm. Not so with some of the other denominations. Later there was formed a society in England, subsidized by wealthy Englishmen, called the "Society for propagating christian knowledge among the Germans in Pennsylvania," the local management of which was placed in the hands of a board of trustees, of which James Hamilton, William Allen, Richard Peters, Conrad Weiser and Benjamin Franklin were members, and whose active and moving spirit and chairman was the Reverend William Smith, D. D. The avowed purpose of the Society was to establish German free schools in the German settlements in Pennsylvania, and to set up a press and print a paper, almanacs and other popular publications, to counteract the influences among the Germans of the press of Christoph Saur, who had printed the German Bible—the first Bible in an European language printed in America—and who boldly declared that under the Society's cloak of charity lurked political intentions. The humor of the situation not being relieved when, after several years of earnest endeavors, Dr. Smith was imprisoned by order of the Quaker majority in the Assembly for allowing an article translated from Franklin's Gazette, which he had not written, to appear in the paper, which ended the paper and largely the Society's usefulness. The one fact of the propaganda, standing prominently out, being that "Poor Richard," whose warmest admirers have never considered in the light of a religious enthusiast, was relieved of a second-hand, unproductive German printing-office, which had been purchased from him by the Society.

The presses of Maryland and Virginia show little that is expressive of the religious thought of this period in those Provinces.

In South Carolina, New England Congregationalism found an earnest advocate in Josiah Smith, and the Church of England a forceful champion in Alexander Garden, who strongly combatted the influence of Whitefield in the Province.

In Georgia appeared, for the second time, that flaming torch of Methodism, George Whitefield, who awoke with alarm the conservative churches of the Atlantic coast, from Savannah to Boston, with his fiery eloquence. Churches and Colleges thundered denunciations against him and his methods. Pulpits were denied to him, and he spoke to his large audiences from porches and on commons. The feeling against him in New England was somewhat increased by a statement attributed to Jonathan Edwards by Thomas Clap, Rector of Yale College, which Edwards indignantly denied, that it was Whitefield's expressed "design to turn the generality of the ministers in the country out of their places and resettle them with ministers from England, Scotland and Ireland."

Among the issues of the printing-press, not wholly religious in character, the following are briefly noted as among the more important issues made in each Province during the period covered by this volume:

In Massachusetts, in 1731, Jonathan Edwards' first published work, God glorified in the work of redemption, was printed. In 1732, André Le Mercier, the French minister in Boston, issued his important Church history of Geneva. In 1734, Ellis Huske, postmaster of Boston began the publication of the Boston Post-boy. In 1735, Thomas Fleet began printing the Boston Evening-Post, the best newspaper printed in New England in its period. In this year, also, William Brattle issued his Compendium logicae, which remained a text-book in Harvard College until 1765. And Judah Monis, Hebrew instructor in Harvard College, and the first Jewish convert to christianity in New England, issued his important Grammar of the Hebrew tongue. In 1736 appeared the first volume of Thomas Prince's uncompleted Chronological history of New-England, and John Mason's Brief history of the Pequot war. The dedication of William Douglass' Practical history of a new military fever, discloses the existence of a Medical Society in Boston, the first society of this nature formed in the United States. In 1743 the American Magazine, the third attempt at this form of periodical publication, and the second of the same name, was begun and continued for three years and four months. In 1745 the press chronicles the success of the arms of New England in taking Cape Breton in Narrative, Sermon and Song. In 1746 the end of the Rebellion in Scotland gives an opportunity for all the Provinces to show their loyalty to the mother-country. In 1747 William Douglass began to issue, in serial form, his Summary, historical and political, of the British Settlements in North-America, the second volume of which was completed in 1751. In 1748 appeared two important narratives of Indian captivity, John Norton's Redeemed captive, and Nehemiah How's Narrative of captivity, which were followed, in 1750, by Benjamin Doolittle's Short narrative of mischief done by the French and Indian enemy on the western frontiers of Massachusetts from 1744 to 1748. In this year, also, Jonathan Mayhew delivered his frequently reprinted Discourse concerning unlimited submission and non-resistance to the higher powers, on the anniversary of the death of Charles I.

In Rhode Island, James Franklin, the elder, printed in 1730 a collection of the Acts and Laws, together with the Charter; and, in 1732, began printing the Rhode-Island Gazette, the first newspaper printed in the Colony, which suspended publication at the end of seven months. John Callender's important Historical discourse on the affairs of Rhode-Island, for the first one hundred years, was printed at Boston in 1739. In 1744 the Widow Franklin printed a collection of the Acts and Laws, together with the Charter. In 1742 A Proclamation was issued by the Governor, offering a reward of five hundred pounds for the arrest of one Obadiah Mors for counterfeiting. The fact, together with the spelling of the surname, is of further interest and bibliographical importance, for the reason that the portrait of Matthew Henry in the tenth edition of his Communicant's companion, printed in Boston in 1731, is signed "N Mors Sculp" The portrait appears to be executed on copper-plate, and there is strong probability for believing this to be the first portrait on copper-plate engraved in the American Colonies. Whether N. and Obadiah Mors were of the same family has not been determined.

Among the more important issues of the press of Connecticut, at New London, should be mentioned Samuel Johnson's Introduction to the study of Philosophy, and the Catalogue of the library of Yale-College, compiled by Rector Thomas Clap, both printed in 1743, Jared Eliot's Essay upon field-husbandry, printed in 1748, and the collected Acts and Laws of 1750.

From the press in New York appeared, in 1731, James Lyne's Plan of the City of New-York, erroneously ascribed to 1728 on numerous imitations, which was followed, in 1735, by a Map of the harbour of New-York, and a Map of the Five Indian Nations. In 1782 began the series of political pamphlets relating to the administrations of Governor William Cosby and his successor, George Clarke, in which the side of the Government is represented by the press of William Bradford and its opposers, among whom Rip Van Dam figured, by the press of John Peter Zenger. This controversy led to the establishment by Zenger, in 1783, of the New-York Weekly Journal, the second newspaper printed in the Province, and this was followed by his celebrated trial for libel in 1785, which established the principle of freedom of the press. In 1786 Zenger printed A Brief narrative of the case and tryal. This has been frequently reprinted, and so far-reaching seemed the principle involved that it was also annotated for the benefit of students in law by two eminent lawyers in the Colonies, one of whom was Jonathan Blenman, King's attorney in Barbados, in Remarks on Zenger's Tryal, first published in the Barbados Gazette. In 1785 Zenger printed the Charter of the City of New-York, the best example of his printing-press, William Bradford printing in 1786 the Charter of the City of Albany. In 1748 James Parker began the publication of the New-York Weekly Post-boy, changing its name in 1747 to the New-York Gazette revived in the weekly Post-boy; but Henry De Foreest's New-York Evening Post, begun in the fall of 1744, when William Bradford's New-York Gazette ceased publication, was the lineal successor of that paper, as De Foreest was Bradford's partner at the time of the suspension. In 1744 Daniel Horsmanden, Recorder of the City of New York, issued his Journal of the conspiracy for burning the City of New-York, James Parker also printing, in 1749, the Laws, Statutes, Ordinances and Constitutions of the City of New-York, in the Mayoralty of Edward Holland, and in 1750 reprinted Robert Dodsley's two dramatic tales, The Toy-shop, and The King and the miller of Mansfield, with a single exception the earliest dramatic pieces printed in the American Colonies.

As the press had not within this period become established in New Jersey, John Kinsey's edition of the Acts of the General Assembly of New-Jersey was printed by the Bradfords in Philadelphia in 1782, while James Parker, at New York, in 1747, printed the Bill in Chancery, and Publications of the Council of Proprietors of East-New-Jersey.

In Pennsylvania, the English presses, reinforced by the German presses, have increased the literary output both in quantity and quality. In 1780, Welsh scholarship in a western wilderness had brought forth the first Welsh Concordance to the Bible, the Cyd-Gordiad Eguyddorawl o'r Serythurau, of Abel Morgan. In 1782, Benjamin Franklin began printing the Poor Richard Almanacks, under the name of Richard Saunders, perhaps the best known of all these annual publications, of which some thirty others were begun or continued during this period. In this year also, Franklin published the first newspaper in the German language printed in the American Colonies, the Philadelphische Zeitung, of which a single number only is known to be extant. In 1784, there was issued from Franklin's press James Anderson's Constitutions of the Free-Masons, the first work of free-masonry printed in America, and in 1785, the second classic printed in this country, Cato's Moral distiches Englished in couplets, by James Logan. In 1788, Christoph Saur set up at Germantown a German printing-press, all works in the German language heretofore printed having been printed by Benjamin Franklin in Roman types, and in the following year published Zionitischer Weyrauch-Hugel, the largest and most important collection of the hymns of the Ephrata Cloister, and the first book printed with German type in America. In the same year Saur began to print the second German newspaper, if that name can be properly applied to it, Der Hoch-Deutsch Pensylvanische Geschicht-Schreiber. It was at first intended to issue a number once every three months, but this was too slow even for Germantown, Pennsylvania, and the more rapid issue of once a month was finally determined upon, and it appeared monthly until 1786. In that year it startled its readers by appearing twice a month until 1775, when its headlong course was changed to a weekly issue, until its publication under father, son and grandson finally ceased. The elder Saur was a very conscientious man in all his dealings. After issuing his paper for a number of years and finding that his news, even at the long range it was printed, did not always prove true, he inserted before the word news in the title the word probable, "Wahrscheinlicher Nachrichten," so as to clear his conscience. It is believed that this example has never been followed. In 1740, Franklin printed a Collection of Charters and other publick Acts relating to Pennsylvania. In January, 1741, the American Magazine, projected and edited by John Webbe, the first magazine issued in the American Colonies, was printed by Andrew Bradford, its appearance being hastened by the announcement of the General Magazine, projected and printed by Benjamin Franklin, which appeared three days after, neither of which were continued for more than six months. In this year Franklin also issued the Laws of the Government of New-Castle, Kent and Sussex upon Delaware. The year 1742 owes the large number of its German imprints to the presence of Count Zinzendorff in Pennsylvania, whose printing and that of his friends was mainly done by Franklin's press. In this year Franklin also printed John Kinsey's edition of the Charters and Collection of all the Laws of the Province of Pennsylvania; and William Bradford, third printer of that name, began the publication of the Pennsylvania Journal. In 1743, Franklin printed Johannes Bechtel's En Kort Cathéchismus, a translation of his Shorter Catechism for the use of the colonists from Sweden on the Delaware, the only work printed in the Swedish language in the American Colonies, and began to print the series of his Pocket Almanacks. In this year also, Christoph Saur completed the printing of the Biblia in the German language, a prospectus of which had been issued two years before. This was the first Bible in an European language printed in America. The importance of the undertaking cannot be underrated. The charge of Saur's enemies that his Bible was not the genuine article is confuted by comparison with the thirty-second Halle edition, from which it was reprinted. If his press had accomplished nothing else the publication would have rendered it illustrious in the annals of early printing in America. Collectors will not fail to note the differences in the two impressions bearing date of the year 1743. In 1744, Benjamin Franklin printed what is generally considered to be the best example of the printer's art produced by the greatest printer of this period in the American Colonies, M. T. Cicero's Cato-major, or his discourse of old-age, the third translation of a classic printed in this country, although Franklin, in "The Printer to the Reader," incorrectly calls it the first, overlooking the fact that he had himself printed Cato's Moral distiches in 1735, translated, as was this, by Chief Justice James Logan. In this year Franklin also printed An Account of the new invented fire-places, which he had invented; and the issue of a Catalogus of choice and valuable books, printed and distributed gratis by him, furnishes another instance of ephemeral publications rising to the rank of rarissimo among early printed books. About the year 1745 the strained relations which had existed for several years between Christoph Saur and Conrad Beissel, head of the Brotherhood, led the Ephrata Brethren to set up a German printing-press of their own within the Cloister, the practical character of the community being exhibited by the Brotherhood at once undertaking the manufacture of their own paper, and doing their own printing, binding, editing, translating and composing. For this reason the issues of the Ephrata press show many peculiarities. The splendid folio volumes of over fifteen hundred pages of T. J. Van Braght's Der Blutige Schan-Platz, which the Brethren translated from the Dutch into German, manufactured the paper for printing an edition of twelve hundred copies, and engaged the services of fifteen men for three years in printing, is the largest and in some respects the most remarkable book of the Colonial period. In 1747, appeared Benjamin Franklin's Plain truth, advocating vigorous measures for the defence of the frontiers of Pennsylvania, which occasioned an animated controversy, in which the Quakers, Mennonists, Dunkers and non-resistant sects joined in deprecating any resort to arms. In this year the New England custom of general fasts was transplanted to Pennsylvania by Franklin, who proposed and drew up the form of A Proclamation, and printed it in both English and German.

From the year 1780 to 1787-1788 William Parks, under an arrangement with the governments of Maryland and Virginia, by which he was to receive from each two hundred pounds a year, secured to him by Act of Assembly by fifty thousand pounds weight of tobacco, maintained printing offices at both Annapolis and Williamsburg. To the latter place he removed permanently about the year 1788. He was succeeded at Annapolis, in 1789, by Jonas Green, as printer to the Province of Maryland. In 1745 Green began the publication of the Maryland Gazette, second paper of that name printed in the Province, which was continued with marked typographical features and ability into the next century. At Annapolis, in 1780, William Parks printed Ebenezer Cook's Sotweed redivivus, and in the following year, in The Maryland muse, his Sot-weed factor, first printed in London in 1708, both written in heavy burlesque verse.

It is characteristic of the colonists of Maryland and Virginia that, while they were of the same stock as those who peopled New England, their ideals seemed formed more in imitation of the social conditions existing in England than the colonists north of them. This is reflected in the literature produced. The northern colonists furnish no parallel early instance to George Sandys translating ten of the fifteen books of Ovid's Metamorphoses "limned by that unperfect light which was snatched from the hours of night and repose" in the sylvan wilderness of Virginia. And when, after much opposition from royal governors, the printing press finally becomes established at Williamsburg, in 1780, the traditions of this early scholarship are seen in almost the first issue of William Parks' press, being a hymn of praise, an ode to the printing art, in J. Markland's Typographia,—the slumbering literary culture in the Colony receiving further proof in the following year by the proposals to print in two volumes The Virginia miscellany, consisting of new poems, essays and translations on various subjects, by several gentlemen of this country. In 1788 William Parks printed the Collection of all the Acts of Assembly, and about the same time he printed, anonymously, John Tennent's Every man his own doctor, a popular, frequently-printed manual, which regular practitioners of medicine have always found of great assistance in securing them patients. In advertising this, and Every man his own lawyer, for sale, Franklin humorously added in a note that "in a short time will be published Every man his own priest." In 1786 William Parks began the publication of the Virginia Gazette, the first newspaper printed in Virginia. In 1787 he printed John Mercer's Exact abridgment of all the public Acts of Assembly, the Continuation of which, printed by him in 1789, is a work rarely to be found with it. In 1742 Parks printed E. Smith's Compleat housewife, the first American cook-book, which has had many imitators since without reaching the degree of perfection. In 1742 he printed William Stith's History of Virginia, a work of variable merit but of great bibliographical interest, which brings the history of the Colony down to 1624 only, and was intended by its author to be the first part of a continuation, which never appeared. William Parks also printed, in 1740, A True and faithful narrative of the proceedings of the House of Burgesses of North-Carolina, against Chief Justice William Smith, the first work printed in this country bearing wholly upon events in that Province.

In 1732 the first printing-press was established at Charleston, South Carolina. On slight foundation it appears that about January of that year Eleazer Phillips, junior, son of a bookseller in Charlestown, Massachusetts, began to print the South-Carolina Weekly Journal, which was suspended by his death a few months afterwards. Of this paper no copies are known to be extant. In the same period with the Journal Thomas Whitmarsh began the publication of the South-Carolina Gazette, which ended with his death in 1733. No other publications were apparently printed until the year 1734, when Lewis Timothy, who had been associated with Benjamin Franklin in Philadelphia, began the publication of the South-Carolina Gazette, the second paper of that name printed in the Province. In 1736 Timothy printed Nicholas Trott's edition of the Laws of the Province of South-Carolina, and in the following year printed the first edition of John Wesley's Collection of Psalms and hymns, which ante-dates the first English edition by a year. In 1742 his son, Peter Timothy, printed the Report of the committee of both Houses of Assembly, in regard to General Oglethorpe's unfortunate expedition against St. Augustine. Previously, in 1741, Peter Timothy had also printed Patrick Tailfer's True and historical narrative of the Colony of Georgia, last of the thirteen Colonies to be settled, but first to print its history, a work which, apart from its historical importance, has strong claims to bibliographical interest in the three impressions assigned to this year in printing.

The following list of subscribers, received since the publication of the first volume, is here recorded with a deep sense of acknowledgment to the Institutions and their officials, and to the Individuals who have thus aided in the publication of a work which, from its nature, should be of first importance in any community where American literature is collected, read, or studied:

FEBRUARY 2 [-DECEMBER, 1734.] Charles-Town: Printed by Lewis Timothy. 1734. fol. Lewis Timothée, the son of a French protestant refugee, had been the first librarian of the Library Company of Philadelphia, before his removal to South Carolina. His name was soon after Anglicized to Lewis Timothy. After his death in December, 1738, the paper was continued by his widow Elizabeth Timothy, who relinquished its control to her son, Peter Timothy, in 1740, by whom it was continued, except for a brief suspension in 1765 occasioned by the Stamp Act, until 1772. In that year, and for several years after it was printed by Thomas Powell & Co., at Timothy's printing office, for their joint account. About May, 1775, the Gazette was discontinued. In April, 1777, Timothy resumed the publication, altering the title to "The Gazette of the State of South-Carolina," under which it was published until the surrender of Charleston to the British in 1780, when Timothy became a prisoner of war, and the paper was suspended. Peter Timothy died in 1782. And in December of that year, his widow, Anne Timothy, revived the Gazette and continued its publication, twice a week until her death in September, 1792. Her son, Benjamin Franklin Timothy, then continued its publication, soon taking a partner, under the joint ownership of whom it was called "The South-Carolina State Gazette, and Timothy and Mason's Daily Advertiser." When the partnership was dissolved, the Gazette was printed by Benjamin Franklin Timothy until 1802, in which year its publication finally ceased.

[-December 28, 1742.] Philadelphia: Printed and sold by William Bradford, at the Sign of the Bible in Second Street. 1742. Sm. fol. HSP. NYPL. Founded by William Bradford, third printer of that name. With number three the title was changed to "The Pennsylvania Journal, or Weekly advertiser," and so continued until its publication was discontinued in 1797. In 1744, it was printed at the Sign of the Bible, the corner of Black Horse Alley in Second Street. And, in 1754, at the Sign of the Bible, the corner-house of Front and Market-streets. In August 1766, Thomas Bradford was admitted to partnership, and the Journal was printed and sold by William and Thomas Bradford, at the Corner of Front and Market-Streets, until 1778. From July, 1774, to October, 1775, a cut of a divided snake, with the motto Unite or die, was substituted for the cut of an open book in the heading. The publication of the Journal was suspended from November 30, 1776, to January 29, 1777; and, again, from September 17th, to about December 23, 1778. When publication was resumed at this date, Thomas Bradford alone, was printer and publisher up to May, 1781, when P. Hall was admitted to partnership; and, beginning with July 1781, the Journal was issued twice a week, from the Printing-Office in Laetitia-Court. The partnership was dissolved in 1782. Thomas Bradford continuing to print the Journal as sole proprietor up to 1797, when it was finally discontinued, and the True American, a daily paper, published in its stead. There is an incomplete file from July 11, 1765 to November 6, 1784, in the Massachusetts Historical Society.

[With a postscript concerning heresies and schisms.] THE THIRD EDITION. Boston: Re-printed and sold by Rogers and Fowle in Queen-street, next to the Prison. 1748. pp. 77. 16mo. WL. The intolerant spirit of the president and governors of Yale College in regard to the observance of religious forms, at this time, deter- mined a number of the senior class to reprint Locke's Essay on toleration, and a considerable number of subscriptions were ob- tained. The president learning of it, reprimanded them for their conduct, and ordered them to make a public confession, or else they should not have their degrees. All made the required confes- sion but one. "The day before commencement he found his name was not in the catalogue of his class, who were to have their de- grees: he waited on the president and corporation to know the reason why his name was not in the catalogue: he was told that he had been in the mischievous business of carrying about sub- scriptions for the reprinting of Mr. Locke on toleration. He told them he was of age, and had property, and if he could not have his degree, he would appeal to the king in council: that he had an attorney, and would enter it soon. Some time after, a freshman was sent to him, acquainting him that the president and corpora- tion wished to see him. He waited on them, and they treated him with much complaisance, and told him to appear with his class and take his degree."—Trumbull's History of Connecticut, II:188.	AUCTION VALUES

JANUARY-[December, 1748.] New-York: Printed by James Parker, at the new Printing-office in Beaver-street. 1748. fol. Continued to 1758, by its founder James Parker. In 1747, the title was changed to "New-York Gazette revived in the Weekly Post-boy." In January, 1758, William Weyman became a partner and principal manager of the paper, and the title was altered to "The New-York Gazette; or, the Weekly Post-boy." The partnership expired in February, 1759. And Parker assigned the publication of the paper to his nephew, Samuel Parker, who continued it as "Parker's New-York Gazette or, the Weekly Post-boy," to July, 1760, when James Parker again assumed its publication, with John Holt, under the firm name of James Parker and Co. This partnership ended in April, 1762, when John Holt, under a lease, continued the paper, without Parker's name in the title, till October 1766. On the 27th November, 1766, Parker again resumed its publication and continued it until a few months before his death, June 24, 1770. On August 27, 1770 Samuel Parker and Anthony Cart began the publication of the paper and continued it for two years. The publication was then suspended for several months, but was renewed in August 1773, by Samuel F. Parker and John Anderson, and in a short time after finally discontinued, after a publication of thirty years from its first appearance.	AUCTION VALUES

The first edition may be known by the poor quality of the paper, and by pages 257 to 303 being misnumbered 247 to 293. This error was corrected in the second Williamsburg edition, which was not printed until about the year 1753, the date of the London edition. These two editions are identical, with no other change than the title-pages, and were both, evidently, printed at Williamsburg. The copies met with are printed on different qualities of paper, the signature with the wrong paging differing materially in quality both in the American editions and the supposed London edition. Objections were shortly publicly made to the dividing lines, on the Map, between New York and New Jersey, which was answered by the author. Publication was to be made as soon as a thousand subscriptions were obtained, but it is not probable that this number was reached, as further publication of the Map was not made until 1755, when two editions were published in Philadelphia.	AUCTION VALUES

Second title: THE CHARTER GRANTED BY HIS MAJESTY KING CHARLES II. TO THE GOVERNOUR & COMPANY OF THE ENGLISH COLONY OF CONNECTICUT IN NEW-ENGLAND IN AMERICA.

New-London Printed and sold by Timothy Green, Printer to the Governour, and Company of the above said Colony. 1750. pp. (2), 8.

The variations in known copies of this edition of the Laws are numerous partly owing to the manner in which it was issued, the printing and binding of the 1106 copies authorized not being completed before 1758. These variations are typographical and indicate a resetting of the types, and reprinting of sheets in order to complete the required number of bound volumes. Later, probably in 1768, the entire volume with the exception of pages 1 to 16, was reset, forming practically a second edition, and bearing the date of issue of the first, 1750. This reprint differs, also, from the first, in having a table of ten pages preceding the text of the Laws, which includes the October 1750, and October 1751 session laws, forming pages 257-262, which are followed in all known copies with the compilation of session laws, pp. 263-336, printed in 1768.
